Downtown Carson Street Parking and Pedestrian Improvements Plan

March 14, 2013

INTRODUCTION

In early 2012, representatives of downtown businesses asked the Board of Supervisors to consider a proposal to stripe Carson Street to provide additional parking for downtown businesses and create a safer pedestrian environment. The Board of Supervisors directed staff to look into the proposal and report back the findings. City staff conducted a workshop and collected surveys from downtown property owners and businesses to determine if they were interested, as a group, in pursuing the conceptual plan. The results of the survey and public comment received during the January 3, 2013, Board of Supervisors meeting indicated general support of moving ahead to implement the downtown parking plan. At that time, the Board of Supervisors directed staff to prepare an implementation plan and present it at a subsequent meeting. The following sections outline the components of the proposed implementation.

REMOVAL OF EXISTING STRIPING & RE-STRIPING

The Public Works Department will hire a contractor to remove the selected existing striping on Carson Street within the project area from Sixth Street to Ann Street. Only striping that would conflict with the proposed new design will be removed. The contractor would also stripe the proposed new design. In addition, some new crosswalks would be added, particularly at four-legged intersections. The cost for the additional crosswalks has been included in the estimate.

FENCING

The fencing that runs along either side of Carson Street from approximately Musser Street to Robinson Street would be substantially removed by City crews in a fashion that it could be reinstalled if so desired. City staff has determined that the removal of the fencing itself can be accomplished with a relatively minimal effort. However, the main posts cannot easily be removed or reinstalled (if necessary). Should the project be implemented, the fencing would be removed, but the main posts would be left in place and only individual posts removed if they are determined to be obstacles for parking or for changed use by adjacent businesses. The posts could be permanently removed in the future if desired.

PARKING EVALUATION – PARKING RESTRICTIONS

City staff will solicit input from business within the project area to determine what the ideal parking restrictions should be for the additional proposed parking stalls. A proposal for recommended parking restrictions will be provided after all feedback is received. Staff is currently in discussion with representatives of the Legislative Counsel Bureau and State Capitol regarding parking along the frontage of state facilities on the east/northbound side of Carson Street between E. Fifth Street and E. Musser Street.

PARKING STALL LENGTH

Initially, the proposed length of each stall was approximately 24 feet, but concerns were raised by the public and the Board at the January 3 meeting that some residents may have difficulty backing into stalls to parallel park, particularly with larger vehicles. Therefore, the suggestion was made to increase the length of the parking stalls to allow for vehicles to pull in and out. After further evaluation, it was determined that 27 feet would be more appropriate to allow for the pulling in and out of vehicles and that length could be consistently applied throughout the project area with very minimal loss of parking spaces. The proposed layout would result in 85 parallel parking spaces.

EMERGENCY RESPONSE

The design proposed for Carson Street has been reviewed by City officials responsible for emergency response. A proposed standard operating procedure developed by the Carson City Fire Department has been developed and is attached to this document in Attachment A.

ESTIMATED TRAFFIC IMPACTS

Analyses of traffic impacts were conducted in 2007 and 2012 to determine the estimated traffic impacts on Carson Street and other surrounding streets. It was determined that should the project be implemented, the levels of service on Carson Street and surrounding streets would remain at acceptable levels. The amount of traffic on Carson Street is expected to decrease by approximately 35%. The traffic would shift to other parallel facilities. Stewart Street could be expected to experience an increase of approximately 20%, Roop Street could expect approximately 15%, and the north-south roads west of Carson Street to (and including) Mountain Street could expect increases of approximately 10%. It is also expected that there will be some additional shift of traffic to the freeway. While the freeway extension to Fairview Drive has certainly had a significant impact on traffic volumes and travel patterns in the City, the freeway has not been completed. In addition to the substantial traffic volumes being carried on surface streets from Fairview Drive to the south, there are still many travelers that are “through” trips – not stopping in Carson City – who choose to continue to use Carson Street instead of the freeway. It is reasonable to expect some of those motorists to be encouraged to use the freeway for those “through” trips if the proposed project is implemented.

A traffic engineering analysis was conducted specifically for the intersection of Carson Street and William Street due to concerns about the operation of the intersection. It was determined that the overall operations of this intersection would be expected to improve slightly. Like other intersections, operations would be monitored following implementation.

SIGNAGE

Parking signage would be installed per the results of the parking evaluation. In addition, informational signage would be installed to inform motorists approaching the downtown area on Carson Street that continuing on to the portion of Carson Street with reduced lanes is the way to access local businesses.

COST TO IMPLEMENT PROPOSED PROJECT

The signing and striping for the proposed project is expected to be accomplished through the work of a contractor with the estimated cost being about $32,000. The cost is detailed in Attachment B to this document. There are multiple potential sources of funding for this proposed project, and should the project be implemented, direction would be sought from the Board of Supervisors regarding which funding source would be utilized.

FURTHER PROJECT EVALUATION

The project area would be evaluated and monitored on a continuing basis. Traffic counts will be collected prior to implementation of the revised striping as well as after project completion on a periodic basis. Traffic counts would be conducted not just on Carson Street, but on the parallel north-south running roads which are expected to experience increased traffic volumes due to the proposed project. In addition, intersection performance will be monitored once the project is implemented to determine if any modifications need to be made in order to keep traffic at an optimal flow. Any potential safety concerns will also be addressed and City staff will remain in contact with downtown businesses to accept input on potential improvements, if there is a need. It is proposed that traffic counts after implementation would begin about two weeks after implementation and the results of those counts (in comparison to the "before" counts) would be presented to the Board of Supervisors for its review as well as a review of the other factors listed above including safety, business inputs, and others. This information would be presented to the Board of Supervisors within two months of the implementation of the project.

RESTORATION OF INITIAL DESIGN

The current striping and traffic operations conditions could be restored if the proposed project is implemented and then a determination is made to restore previous conditions. Should this occur, the project area would be resurfaced and re-striped by a contractor. The cost estimate included in Attachment C shows the cost to return the roadway to the existing conditions. As detailed in Attachment C, the total cost to restore the street section to the existing configuration is about $119,000. However, only about $30,000 is the cost of signs and striping directly attributable to the project. The majority of the cost – about $89,000 – would be related to a resurfacing of the road surface. This would allow for the restriping without removal of striping already in place and would be a pavement preservation activity. The extension of the pavement life will be required in any circumstance, and this cost would be realized by the City with or without the proposed project. It is proposed that the fencing would not be reinstalled because even if the street were restored to two thru lanes in each direction, the traffic volumes are currently less than half of the peak volumes experienced in 2002 and volumes are expected to continue to decline.

TIMEFRAME

If approved to proceed by the Board of Supervisors, staff would complete the remaining evaluations by May 31, contract for the work to be done, and have the work performed in Summer 2013.

INDEX AS: Operations

REVISED: Proposed

SUPERSEDES:

PURPOSE: The purpose of this procedure is to provide direction on response and vehicle placement during emergencies in the Downtown/Carson Street area. Additionally, the purpose is to allow for safe fire operations, ensure public safety and reduce traffic congestion during emergencies.

RESPONSIBILITY: All operational personnel within the Carson City Fire Department are responsible to ensure that this SOP is followed.

PROCEDURE: Unless the information provided directs the responding units to the rear of an establishment, the first arriving emergency response unit shall report to the front (side A) of the address given and provide a size up of the situation. If the emergency can be handled from an alley or side street, that unit shall proceed to that area on their initial response.

The second due unit will respond to the rear or side alley of the structure. The third due unit shall stage off of Carson Street, but as close to the scene as possible and wait for instructions from the IC.

In the event traffic prevents initial responding units from reaching a Carson Street address, units should respond via the nearest side street and gain access to the incident location on foot and direct incoming units to stage and await further access instructions.

TO: Board of Supervisors
Meeting of April 18, 2013

FROM: Lee Plemel, AICP, Planning Director

DATE: March 22, 2013

SUBJECT: Downtown Parking & Pedestrian Improvement Plan

The attached "Downtown Carson Street Parking and Pedestrian Improvement Plan" contains the implementation plan for the proposed project. This plan was developed based upon feedback from the Board of Supervisors on January 3, 2013. At the direction of the Board, City staff conducted a public workshop on March 14, 2013. Following are some of the issues raised by the public, grouped broadly into a few categories.

Project cost:

Citizens have noted that the cost to implement the project was originally stated to be over $100,000, but it is now being stated as approximately $32,000. Since the first meeting with the Board of Supervisors, the Public Works Department reevaluated the ability to implement the striping plan without resurfacing the entire street, which comprised a majority of projected project costs. Public Works now proposes to implement the striping without resurfacing the entire street, and has found other project cost savings based on a more detailed analysis of implementing the project. Therefore, the estimated cost to implement the plan is now approximately $32,000.

Why do we need more parking downtown?

City staff does not believe we need more parking downtown, and that is not the primary purpose of the project. The purpose is to make downtown Carson Street more pedestrian friendly to encourage more shoppers and diners to visit the downtown. The parking spaces do this in a cost-effective way by creating a barrier between pedestrians and travel lanes, a frequently used method for improving the pedestrian environment on a street. Certain business owners along Carson Street are supportive of having additional parking in front of their businesses.

Economic analysis of the project:

Several citizens have commented that an economic impact study should be completed prior to implementing the plan. Such an analysis would be costly; possibly more than the cost of initially implementing the plan. However, similar downtown lane reduction projects have occurred across the nation in the last decade and we can draw some conclusions from those projects.

Such a project is currently being considered for the casino corridor at Stateline/South Shore, Lake Tahoe, and a recently-released draft economic analysis has been prepared for the project (prepared by Economic & Planning Systems, Inc.). As the economic analysis document notes, it is impossible to accurately predict the detailed economic impacts of a project before it is implemented, as each project is unique. However, one can draw general conclusions from the impacts of similar past projects. Pages 31-39 of the Economic Analysis of the US 50/South Shore Community Revitalization Project, attached, provide case studies from similar projects that have been implemented in Livermore, Sutter Creek, and Lancaster, California. General conclusions for lane reduction projects are noted on pages 38-39. These projects have been implemented to improve economic conditions in the communities in which they are located.

Additionally, the Project for Public Spaces (PPS) "Rightsizing Streets" website has additional case studies of similar lane reduction projects across the country. Attached is information from their webpage and case studies from Orlando, Florida, and Poughkeepsie, NY. PPS notes that the typical goals of such projects include:

- Increasing safety and access for all users
- Encouraging walking, biking, and transit use
- Supporting businesses and the local economy
- Creating places that foster community livability

The project in Orlando reduced travel lanes from four lanes to two lanes with a turn lane. The case study notes that traffic volume declined from 20,500 to 18,100 immediately after the project was implemented, but increased back up to as high as 21,000, with volumes generally remaining in the 18,000 to 20,000 range. This is notable because Carson Street volume was approximately 19,000 in 2012, which is within the capacities for a two-lane street with turn lanes to maintain that level of volume. Additional case studies can be found at the Project for Public Spaces website at www.pps.org/reference/rightsizing/.

Impacts to businesses of reducing traffic on downtown Carson Street:

The traffic study estimates that there will be a 35 percent reduction in traffic on downtown Carson Street if the project is implemented. Many businesses have expressed concerns that the current reduction in traffic has hurt business and that further reductions in traffic resulting from the project would hurt business even more. As noted above, the general goal is to improve overall economic/business conditions in the downtown vicinity. There are certain types of businesses, such as gas stations and fast food restaurants, whose revenues generally track with the amount vehicular traffic, according to economic case studies.

However, if additional traffic or even maintaining current traffic levels is imperative to improving downtown business conditions, the City and businesses are going to have to find other solutions to have long-term success because the future completion of the freeway is going to reduce Carson Street traffic regardless of this project. City staff is proposing to include additional signs at appropriate locations on Carson Street approaching the downtown area to encourage visitors to continue to use Carson Street for downtown businesses.

Downtown needs become a destination before implementing such a project:

Citizens have noted that there are not enough businesses downtown, or not the right type of businesses, to make the downtown a destination and, therefore, argue that a project like this is not needed until we have those businesses. Projects such as this are typically implemented by cities in order to create the environment that attracts the desired mix of businesses. Generally, the public investment leads to additional private investment. Downtown retailers typically consist of locally-owned, small scale stores. Such stores rely on foot traffic for business, and such businesses generally don't want to locate where foot traffic doesn't exist. The proposed plan is not the final answer to addressing this issue; it merely starts to implement the framework for improving the downtown shopping environment.

Staff conclusion:

Staff believes that the project is feasible at current and projected traffic volumes and would improve pedestrian safety and general walkability through the downtown area. The plan would be a relatively low-cost, reversible way to test and/or begin to implement the long-term plan of improving the downtown area. Regardless of whether or not this project goes forward at this time, staff believes the City should continue to explore options to make downtown a destination for shoppers, travelers, and residents to drive to, stop, and shop.

5. SUMMARY OF RESEARCH FINDINGS: ROADWAY IMPACTS

EPS has analyzed existing professional and academic research and conducted original case studies of other areas that have implemented major roadway realignments or “bypass” projects to assess the impact on local economic conditions. A key distinction should be made here, in that the Project as currently envisioned does not constitute a “bypass project,” per se, because a bypass nomenclature indicates that traffic is removed from an area entirely, often to an outlying location. In contrast, the Project as currently envisioned and as analyzed in this report will not remove traffic from the existing developed area. In fact, the proposed realignment of the highway analyzed in this Economic Analysis simply shifts a short portion of vehicular traffic from one side of the Stateline commercial district to another side. No net loss in vehicular trips would result from this realignment; in fact, the total net change in total trips (counting all potential routes) is predicted to increase substantially over the long term.¹⁷ As such, the range of potential impacts primarily depends on how key properties are adapted to recognize and capitalize on new traffic and pedestrian dynamics.

While recognizing that there are important differences between a formal “bypass” and a realignment as described here, there are some lessons that can be learned from roadway realignment and “main street” type projects in other areas. Bypass or realignment projects have been found to have extremely varying results from one location to another, resulting from a myriad of political and economic dynamics, land use- and transportation-related factors, and a multitude of other variables. Therefore, caution should be exercised when attempting to compare the effect of one bypass area to another, or a bypass to a highway realignment. Although a bypass constructed in one geographic area may have appeared to increase retail sales in the surrounding district by some specific percentage (for example), however does not predict that the exact same effect will be observed in another geographic area (or vice-versa). That said, EPS has evaluated bypass impacts observed in other areas and from available professional and academic research and has identified lessons learned for consideration, as related to the Project and its possible influence on the South Shore economy.

Case Studies

EPS has researched several roadway realignment projects in other areas of the United States to evaluate some practical examples that will provide a better understanding of the positive and negative effects that these types of projects can have on their surroundings, some of the primary reasons for these impacts, and lessons learned that can be applied to the South Shore. This section summarizes the results of this research, which is based on published articles/reports, analysis of sales tax and other economic data, and discussions with community leaders in the affected areas.

City of Livermore, State Route 84

Located in the suburban outskirts of the San Francisco Bay Area, the City of Livermore is a mid-sized community of approximately 82,000 residents, located in the foothills of the "Tri-Valley" near the cities of San Ramon, Pleasanton, and Dublin. Livermore's population has been growing at a healthy rate of approximately 1 percent per year over the past decade and diversifying its economy into the technology-related sectors. Also, Livermore is an emerging wine destination and has more than 40 wineries located in the rural southern area of the city. City leaders and private-sector parties have been working to enhance the downtown area through development or redevelopment of key parcels.

The heart of Livermore's downtown area was bisected by a busy 4-lane state highway, which detracted from its appeal as a place to stop, shop, dine, and recreate, and the downtown area had been suffering from high vacancy rates and blighted conditions. The City of Livermore embarked on a revitalization process after it became apparent that the high traffic volumes and speeds in the downtown area were causing several negative consequences such as noise, pollution, dust, etc., and generally impeded the appeal of the district as a shopping, dining, and/or recreational destination. Several planning initiatives ensued, including the implementation of a Downtown Specific Plan. To facilitate the desired downtown environment, a highway bypass was designed that would reroute a substantial portion of pass-through traffic from the city's downtown area to a less critical nearby location, which allowed the remaining roadway to be reconfigured as a "complete" or "main" street more amenable to parking, pedestrian traffic, and shopping space.

The City of Livermore and other stakeholders implemented the Highway 84 bypass project, which was completed in 2006, allowing trucks and other regional pass-through traffic to bypass the city's downtown core. The remaining roadway then was available to undergo significant improvements resulting in a vibrant, landscaped, walkable downtown district containing a host of amenities such as an attractive streetscape program, wider sidewalks, and additional bicycle lanes. The City of Livermore even went so far as to allow some parking spaces to be converted and used for outdoor dining. The project has been touted as a tremendous success in terms of increasing quality-of-life for residents and visitors alike. Livermore Mayor John Marchand states, "Since the relocation of SR-84 from downtown Livermore to Isabel Avenue on the city's western edge, Livermore's city center is thriving."¹⁸

This effect can be seen by the numerous new shops and restaurants that have been created in Livermore since the highway realignment, and the city's emergence as a viable destination for shopping, dining, and strolling for residents of the entire East Bay and Tri-Valley Areas. In fact, the City of Livermore has seen its commercial property vacancy rate decrease from 26 percent

when the program began to just 9 percent today. During this same period, downtown Livermore's annual retail sales grew by 15 percent, all at a time when statewide sales tax receipts were declining by approximately 10 percent. The downtown area has seen 194 new businesses created, and the $55 million public investment has so far spurred more than $112 million in private investment, including the creation of a substantial performing arts center.¹⁹

New community events have made downtown Livermore an even more popular attraction, including a year-round Sunday Farmer's Market, the Livermore Wine Country Festival, holiday events, the Amgen Tour of California bicycle race, and many more. Some of the primary reasons cited for the success of Livermore's State Route 84 realignment include the attractive and walkable quality of the streetscape, the appealing mix of restaurants and shops that were attracted to the area, the ease of access for patrons, and the innovative parking solutions.

Sutter Creek

The City of Sutter Creek is a small historic mining town of 2,500 residents, located in the gold country foothills in Amador County, approximately 50 miles from the Sacramento Metropolitan Area. The town historically has been oriented along Highway 49, which ran through the middle of its historic central downtown area. Highway 49 is a fast-moving roadway with a high degree of commuter and truck traffic that contributed to a heavily congested area in downtown Sutter Creek. This condition caused the downtown area to suffer as issues related to parking, noise, congestion, and other factors created a busy yet uninviting streetscape. State highway officials, community leaders, business representatives, and residents came together over many years to create a plan to reroute traffic on Highway 49 to a new alignment that bypassed Sutter Creek altogether. Through-traffic on Highway 49 was planned to be redirected to a newly constructed highway alignment more than a mile from downtown Sutter Creek. This was a controversial plan, and city officials noted that the local business community along Highway 49 was particularly vocal about its opposition to this project, for fear that the lack of pass-through traffic would be detrimental to patronage at their establishments.

Nonetheless, the highway bypass was constructed and completed in 2007, which served to reroute a large degree of highway traffic completely around the town, such that vehicles would not be required to drive through if traveling to destinations along the Highway 49 corridor. Subsequent planning efforts ensued to create a more appealing downtown environment in the downtown area once the traffic issues were resolved. This more-tranquil setting facilitated the expansion of events in the downtown area, such as a summer music series, music festivals, culinary competitions, car shows, and the popular Great Sutter Duck Races.

Like most of California, Sutter Creek did suffer substantial declines in retail sales, as indicated by a 30-percent decrease in taxable sales from 2007 to 2010. However, the timing and magnitude corresponds closely with the onset of the "Great Recession," which had a marked negative impact on the city's retail sales. It is very difficult to separate the impact of regional and national economic conditions to that of the roadway realignment, and many noted that their businesses actually benefitted greatly from the bypass overall. Community leaders have noted that Sutter Creek is stronger than ever, thanks in large part to the more appealing environment that was achieved through the recreation of downtown.

Interestingly, at the same time that sales tax activity was declining in Sutter Creek, visitation to the city was actually growing substantially, as evidenced by the 45-percent increase in annual transient-occupancy tax (TOT) collections from 2005 to 2008.

Over time, Sutter Creek has been working to establish itself as more of a tourism destination, not simply a waypoint along a heavily traveled highway. Although this has been a somewhat slow and arduous process, many positive results have been realized through a variety of efforts, such as establishing a tourism improvement district to market the area and draw visitors, as well as working to establish a more vibrant mix of visitor-serving amenities such as lodging, restaurants, shopping options, parks, etc.

Lancaster

The City of Lancaster, California, has been cited as a pre-eminent example of a small, struggling downtown area that was able to reinvent itself as a local and regional destination by constructing many of the same types of improvements that are envisioned for the South Shore by way of the Project. Although the existing transportation network was able to accommodate a streetscape project without a realignment, Lancaster example is a very good one in that it demonstrates the amenities and economic impacts that can be achieved with “main street” type improvements.

The City of Lancaster is located approximately 70 miles north of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area. The city was incorporated in 1977 and is characterized by a largely suburban quality. The city has undergone significant growth over the past 30 years and has approximately 150,000 residents. Lancaster’s economy historically has been centered on the aerospace industry and population-supporting sectors such as retail, but has fallen on difficult times in recent years as the aerospace industry evolved, recessionary forces put downward pressure on population and employment growth, and major job losses have been sustained in growth-serving industries.

The retail development patterns in Lancaster have tended to follow broad national trends during its relatively short history as a city, with much of its retail development activity being contained in outlying big box locations on the region’s periphery, leaving the downtown area to flounder.

More recently, a movement to bring economic activity back to the downtown has emerged, a major component of which was the award-winning BLVD Transformation Project, which took one of the city’s historic main streets in the central portion of town and created a more walkable, “complete street” or “main street” area with a series of amenities, new and existing uses, and programs for users to enjoy. The project stretched for 9 blocks and included a variety of traffic-calming measures, narrower traffic lanes, increased trees and landscaping, and other community amenities. The photographs below demonstrate the lively and appealing environment that was created, as well as a comparison photograph of the old street and downtown environment that existed before the project.

The BLVD project was successful in transforming the downtown area to a hub of recreational, shopping, and cultural activity for the city and is among the most popular attractions in the entire Antelope Valley. Existing businesses flourished and new businesses were attracted to the area and retail sales in downtown Lancaster had doubled one year after the project was opened. Although only a couple of years old, the $41 million public investment in the project has, to date, resulted in more than $270 million in economic output, more than 800 permanent jobs, 1,100 construction jobs, hundreds of new housing units, and more than $13 million in state and local revenues.²⁰ Property values in the surrounding area have risen by 10 percent, at a time when the rest of the city saw values decline by 1.25 percent.

More than 40 new businesses have flocked to the BLVD since its creation, and it has quickly become the Antelope Valley's premier destination for shopping, dining, and entertainment. It also serves as a major center of community activity, with regular special events and a wide variety of businesses ready to serve Lancaster's residents and visitors.

Additional Research on Roadway Impacts

Other communities throughout the United States have demonstrated similar positive impacts resulting from roadway enhancements, and the strengthening of retail districts that can be achieved by increasing pedestrian activity. The City of Lodi, for example, experienced a 30 percent increase in downtown sales tax revenues resulting from the retrofit of five main street blocks in which sidewalks were widened, curbs were bulbed out at intersections, gateway features were constructed, and trees, lighting, benches, and other streetscape amenities were added.²¹ Other examples from a Study prepared by the New York Department of Transportation further demonstrated the positive impacts that better walking infrastructure provides upon retail sales. This study showed an increase in retail sales of 49 percent in a case study neighborhood after bicycle traffic was enhanced through the addition of separated bike lanes, and over 170 percent increase in sales adjacent to a former parking lot that was converted to a walkable pedestrian plaza.²²

In addition to the case-study research described above, EPS consulted several academic and professional studies that evaluated the influence of bypass and roadway realignment projects on their surrounding local and regional economies.²³

From this case study, professional and academic research, EPS distilled several key findings that can be applied to assess the potential impact of the Project. Key findings from this research include the following items:

- In general, roadway realignment projects very rarely have acute impacts on their local economies, except in very small communities with less than 1,000 population.
- Non-descript highway-oriented towns have a much more difficult time transitioning their local economies after realignments are constructed than those that cater to local residents or offer tourist attractions.
- Towns that serve as residential communities or as tourist destinations can benefit from reduced traffic and improved safety as a result of highway realignments.
- Gas stations and quick service or fast food restaurants cater the most to pass-through traffic. These types of convenience-oriented uses are the most likely to be impacted by the diversion of traffic due to realignments.

²¹ From "The Economic Benefits of Walkable Communities," California Local Government Commission, Center for Local Communities.

²² From "Measuring the Streets," New York Department of Transportation, 2012.

²³ Studies consulted during this process include: California Bypass Study: The Economic Impacts of Bypasses, Volume 1 (2006); The Economic Impacts of Highway Bypasses on Communities (1998); The Impacts of Bypasses on Small- and Medium-Sized Communities: and Econometric Analysis (2002); The Impact of a New Bypass Route on the Local Economic and Quality of Life (2001); The Economic Impact Analysis of the St. Croix River Crossing, (2004), and others.

- Other visitor-serving businesses, such as motels, art galleries, antique stores, and curio shops, cater more to visitors attracted to the community as a destination rather than those simply passing through. These businesses are less likely to be negatively impacted by realignments and may find that business improves as the downtown is turned into a destination.
- Businesses that serve local residents, such as drug stores, banks, and grocery stores, are generally not impacted by realignments.
- While realignments can often have short-term (and negative) impacts on the local economy, sales often improve in the longer term.
- Reducing traffic volumes in tourist areas often helps to improve the attractiveness of the area and can lead to higher sales activity in the affected area and other economic benefits, including added jobs, municipal revenues, higher incomes, etc.
- Tourist-oriented retail is among the least vulnerable categories of retail to a loss in visibility. In fact, these types of retailers often become more successful when traffic is slowed and pedestrian activity is increased.

Rightsizing Streets

The needs of our communities evolve over time, and our street design should, too. That's the idea behind 'rightsizing streets' – reconfiguring the layout of our streets to better serve the people who use them, whether they're commuters driving, shoppers walking, or children bicycling. Across the country, communities large and small are achieving impressive safety, mobility, and community outcomes by implementing such reconfigurations. Project for Public Spaces created this rightsizing resource to highlight the accomplishments of these communities and share best practices. Our placemaking experts can advise stakeholders and decision-makers, skillfully facilitate a rightsizing process, and adeptly produce rightsized designs for agencies and community groups.

What is 'Rightsizing' a Street?

Rightsizing is the process of reallocating a street's space to better serve its full range of users. Picture a four lane road that was built thirty years ago in an undeveloped area, but that now has housing, shops, and an elementary school in close vicinity. The needs of the community surrounding that road have changed over three decades – and the design of that road may need to change to meet those needs as well. It may need a sidewalks or a median to help people cross safely, or on-street parking for folks who want to frequent local shops, or other safety features to prevent injuries. Rightsizing a road can encompass a broad array of redesign measures, and should always be sensitive to context and the vision of the local community, but often involves some or all of the following goals and strategies:

Typical Goals

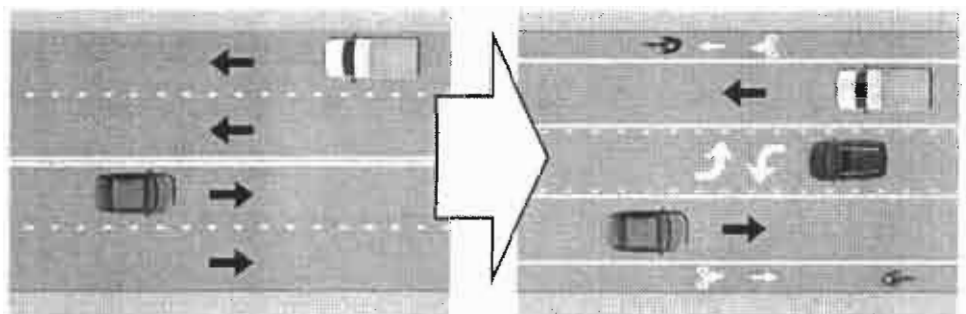

- Increasing safety and access for all users
- Encouraging walking, biking, and transit use
- Supporting businesses and the local economy
- Creating places that foster community livability

See Project Selection and Design Goals Worksheet for more info on selecting streets for rightsizing and methods of measuring rightsizing's outcomes.

Typical Strategies

- Converting vehicle travel lanes to other uses
- Narrowing vehicle lanes
- Adding bike lanes
- Improving pedestrian infrastructure
- Changing parking configuration
- Adding roundabouts and medians

See the History of the DOT for definitions and background links

Street rightsizing projects are sometimes called 'road diets,' or 'Complete Streets,' but rightsizing also describes street redesigns that might be considered outside of those frameworks.

Communities and transportation departments around the country are successfully implementing street rightsizing projects, with impressive results. Collecting before-and-after data about key issues like safety, mode splits, and mobility is crucial to ensuring that these projects meet their communities' needs and stated goals. Each case study in this resource includes before-and-after results.

Rightsizing: Transforming a Street to a Place

Rightsizing a street is often a prerequisite to the street becoming a place where people want to be, instead of just a corridor to pass through. Rightsizing reconfigures a street to best serve the people who need to use it, whether they're drivers, pedestrians, or bicyclists. By improving safety, especially for people walking or biking, and by increasing space devoted to people, rightsizing projects cause vehicles to slow down and people to spend more time outside on the street. This is great for people who live in the street's vicinity, businesses that line it, and those who travel through it.

The most common type of street rightsizing converts a two-way four lane street to a three lane street. Removing one of the vehicle lanes can free up space to add or expand pedestrian, bicycle infrastructure, and on-street parking, or other uses. A rightsized three lane street commonly has one traffic lane and one bicycle lane in each direction, with a shared two-way left hand turn lane in the center that allows cars in both directions to make a left. These changes help make a street better for the range of people using it, typically without restricting vehicle volumes or lengthening travel times.

However, many other street changes could compose a rightsizing project. For instance, on Plymouth Avenue in Brooklyn, a one-way three lane street was converted to a two lane street with a protected bike lane, and Chestnut Street in Philadelphia converted unnecessary parking to a successful public space.

Rightsizing works. Our case studies highlight these projects' positive impacts, and this report confirms that vehicle lanes can be converted to other purposes to achieve safety goals without negative transportation impacts. Rightsizing enables mobility for all users, increases safety for all users, and can contribute to the vitality of communities. The Transportation Trust includes research describing the positive effects of many of the most common rightsizing strategies.

Rightsizing facilitates street safety. Traffic calming improves safety by reducing dangerous driving speeds and movements. Speeding vehicles are exponentially more dangerous than vehicles traveling at appropriate speeds. This report describes how rightsizing can improve street safety. Dedicated pedestrian and bicycle infrastructure also improves street safety.

Rightsizing improves street access for pedestrians by increasing safety and appeal. All transportation trips at least start and end as pedestrian trips, regardless of the intermediate mode. Making these trips safer and more enjoyable for people is crucial for communities' physical health, the cultivation of public spaces, and the success of street-fronted businesses. Not all transportation modes are created equal. Each has its own advantages in terms of safety, cost, efficiency, speed, and inclusivity. When redesigning a street, it is vital to prioritize designs that enable safe mobility for particularly vulnerable users, such as children and elderly pedestrians.

Edgewater Drive: Improving Safety and Supporting a Main Street

By Seth Ullman on Dec 25, 2012 | Leave a Comment and 0 Reactions

Orlando, FL

4 Lanes → 3 Lanes + Bike Lanes

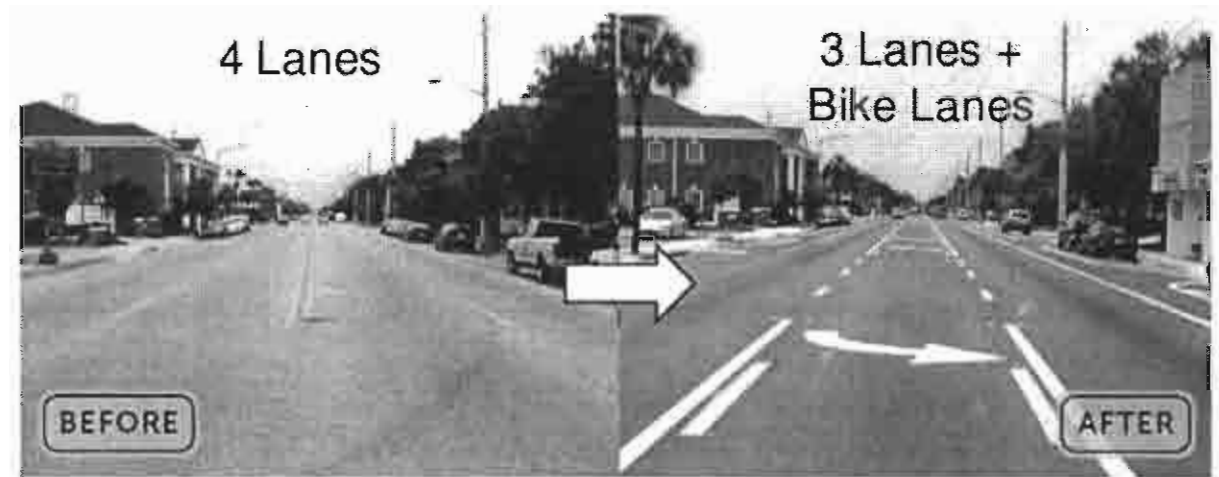

The rightsizing of 1.5 miles of Edgewater Drive in 2002 was driven by the College Park Neighborhood Horizon Plan, which called for making this urban street friendlier to pedestrians and bicyclists. Locals wanted to see the street design support its main street status, instead of just serving as a drive-through street for commuters. The street was transferred from the State to the City's jurisdiction to enable the lane reconfiguration. The road was converted from two travel lanes in each direction to one travel lane in each direction, plus a two-way left turn lane and bike lanes. As a result, the redesign reduced speeding and accidents, and it increased pedestrian and bicycle volumes, on-street parking use rates, and pedestrian and parking satisfaction. A number of new businesses opened on the street following implementation.

Rightsizing Summary

- Travel lanes reduced from 4 to 3 lanes, including a two-way left turn lane, which minimizes lane weaving and speeding, making the road safer for all users.
- Bike lanes added to support bicyclists' use of the street.

Outcomes*

- Speeding is down. The percent of vehicles speeding at 36 MPH or higher dropped from 15.7% to 7.5% at the north end, 9.8% to 8.9% in the middle, and 29.5% to 19.6% at the south end of Edgewater Drive.
- There was a 34% reduction in crashes per mile travelled (146 vs. 87 annually).
- Crash and injury frequency is down. The frequency of crashes decreased from a crash every 2.5 days to every 4.2 days and the frequency of injuries decreased from every 8.9 to every 30.4 days
- Pedestrian volumes increased 23% from 2,136 to 2,632
- Bicycle volumes increased 30%, from 375 to 486.
- The project had no short-term effect on property values. Neighborhood residential and commercial properties values were compared between 2001 and 2002 relative to county-wide change at the public's request. They increased in value at the same rate of change as both the neighborhood and the county.
- Vehicle volumes were reduced, but generally not displaced to nearby streets. Traffic volume declined from 20,500 to 18,100 immediately after the redesign (an average 12% decrease), but increased to 21,000+ in 2007. Volumes have generally remained in the 18,000 to 20,000 range to present.

- Traffic volumes on perpendicular and side streets in the vicinity declined 4% overall, which is possibly the result of fewer cut-throughs and other neighborhood traffic calming measures. However, there were several streets where traffic increased.
 - AM peak travel times along the 1.2 miles with the highest density of traffic signals increased only an average of 50 seconds, from 3 minutes and 20 seconds to 4 minutes and 10 seconds. PM peak travel time increased by 10 seconds northbound and decreased by 10 seconds southbound.
 - The project had no measured impact on bus loading times or operations.
 - On-street parking utilization increased from 29% to 41%. However, some on-street spots were eliminated as part of the resurfacing unrelated to the rightsizing conversion. Orlando DOT posits that much of the increase in utilization is due to the increased comfort level of getting in and out of vehicles parked along the roadway.
 - Before and after surveys were conducted with residents and merchants. The surveys demonstrated that people were more comfortable walking and parking on the street after the changes, while merchant perceptions of pedestrian and parker comfort were more negative than self-reported perceptions. Comments also indicated the need to adjust areas of transition between rightsized and not rightsized parts of the corridor.
- *Before and After Analysis compared three complete years prior to redesign implementation to four complete months after the redesign implementation.

Context

- Public Process: The public asked for before and after measurements to evaluate whether the trial redesign should be kept. Afterwards, some called for the street's reversion to its old configuration. However, the street was recently resurfaced again with no call to revert to the four lane configuration, but only public requests to improve aspects of the rightsized design.
- Additional Costs of Implementation were Minimal: As the project was a simple restriping, the rightsizing redesign cost an estimated $50,000 beyond what repaving would have otherwise cost. These costs were mostly extra staff time for design, outreach, and project management. The different striping requires no extra maintenance. However, as the street was transferred from the State to the City as a condition of the project, future maintenance costs for the City increased, while they decreased for the State. The upside is that Orlando now has more control over planning periodic events on the road.

Raymond Avenue: Rightsizing Improved Safety and Pedestrian Experience

By Seih Ullman on Dec 25, 2012 | Leave a Comment and 0 Reactions

Poughkeepsie, NY

4 → 2 Lane Configuration + Roundabouts and Pedestrian Infrastructure

Raymond Avenue borders Vassar College, residences, the Arlington Business District, open space, and an elementary school in the Town of Poughkeepsie. It is also known as Route 376, and was converted into a four lane minor arterial in the 1960s. This rightsizing project reconfigured 1.5 miles of Raymond Avenue to two lanes, calmed a previously unsafe corridor, and added a range of pedestrian and aesthetic improvements.

In 1999, Project for Public Spaces was hired by Vassar College and the Arlington Steering Committee to study the Arlington Business District. Recommendations for the area included traffic calming, which prompted a redesign of Raymond Avenue by the New York State Department of Transportation (NYS DOT). Phase I, which was completed in 2007, installed two roundabouts and a mid-block crossing on the southern portion of the street in front of Vassar College. Phase II included street landscaping and the installation of third roundabout that serves as a gateway to the business district. Several blocks of Raymond Avenue in the business district itself were also redesigned.

The project succeeded at improving the pedestrian experience and safety, increasing aesthetic appeal, and supporting a vibrant business district.

Rightsizing Summary

- One lane was removed in each direction, such that the street was reduced from four to two lanes.

- Two roundabouts were constructed in Phase I, and a third was constructed in Phase II in order to slow traffic without impeding traffic flow. Each replaced a traffic signal.
- Sidewalks and parking were made more consistent along the corridor, as they were formerly only intermittent. Sidewalks were improved in the business district.
- Neckdowns were added at pedestrian crossings to raise pedestrians' visibility, and reduce crossing distances.
- A center median with plantings and trees was built, which made space for pedestrian refuges at crossings. Lights were also installed in bollards at intersections to further raise pedestrian visibility.
- A mid-block crosswalk was changed at a highly trafficked pedestrian crossing that connects Vassar's main campus to a path leading to student housing. This replaced a signalized crossing, which was possible because the crossing distance was reduced from four lanes to one lane by the street redesign and median island.
- Colored asphalt prints were installed, which delineated parking, sidewalks, and some medians. They visually unified the streetscape, particularly in the business district. The textured streetprint was placed in the road such that parked cars are encouraged to park close to the curb and it acts as a door zone so that parked cars do not open their doors into oncoming vehicles or bicyclists.

Outcomes

A study of the results of the Phase I redesign, which focused on the roadway in front of Vassar College, was undertaken prior to implementation of the Phase II redesign in the commercial district. These statistics refer to the outcomes of Phase I, utilizing data from May 2006 and May 2007, save for accident data, which compared alternate six month periods prior to and after Phase I's installation because of time constraints. A full three-year before and after report is planned for 2013.

- Accidents decreased more than 50%, from 35 to 17 over two six-month periods.
- Vehicle speeds declined by about 24%, or nine miles per hour, in each direction.
- Corridor travel time increased by about 7%.
- Traffic delays decreased 56% at the roundabouts. Reducing delays also reduces emissions and thus improves air quality.
- Vehicle traffic along Raymond Avenue in front of Vassar College decreased 8.8%. Some parallel streets saw increases in traffic, while others saw a reduction or no change. The aggregated increases were less than the decrease of traffic on Raymond Avenue, and some of the decrease can be attributed to altered campus entrance/exit regulations. Traffic calming measures were successfully implemented to mitigate the initial traffic increase on Grand Avenue.

- Many new businesses have opened or expanded in the district since this project.
- Direct observations and video recordings revealed some confusion about the correct use of the roundabouts initially, which decreased over time. The roundabouts were built with raised truck aprons designed to be driven over by large vehicles, but some other vehicles were doing so unnecessarily, which caused design changes for Phase II to discourage that behavior.
- Comments were solicited from the public; one respondent noted that slower vehicle speeds result in reduced traffic noise.
- NYS DOT is now installing a similar project on nearby Route 55 in the Town of LaGrange, where the public reception has been positive. People saw the transformation of Raymond Avenue and want to see those changes on Route 55.

Context

- There was some discord, with the Arlington Business District and the NYS DOT (which controls Raymond Avenue) supporting the rightsizing, and the Town and City of Poughkeepsie formally opposing the changes. A neighborhood group on Grand Avenue was particularly upset by their road's potential use as an alternate thoroughfare. After mitigation measures were installed, the city and residents appear happier with the project. Anecdotally, Raymond Avenue traffic volumes have recently risen to their previous levels. A study is planned for 2013 to evaluate road operations and safety for both phases together with a three year before and three year after period.

Finding a Place for Parking

Parking spaces usually diminish public spaces — but it doesn't have to be that way.

By Ethan Kent, Project for Public Spaces

Despite what you may have heard, nobody goes to a place solely because it has parking. In fact, the current obsession with parking is one of the biggest obstacles to achieving livable cities and towns, because it usually runs counter to what should be our paramount concern: creating places where people enjoy spending time. As long as the myth persists that economic prosperity depends on parking, local governments will continue to waste public money and distort the public planning process.

The realization that creating a place where people want to come and spend time is more important than parking unfortunately eludes many municipalities. Worrying about and wasting public money on parking is taking over the public planning process and subsequently parking is taking over our communities. So how can we put parking in its place and draw people back to public spaces?

One big step forward is to assess the supply of parking in relation to what is actually needed. PPS often works with towns that have excess parking capacity, where the growing number of surface lots and parking structures has choked out the very reason people drove there in the first place. In Salt Lake City, for instance, PPS's land-use map highlighted the excess parking spaces within 1/4 mile of downtown, showing that the real shortage was of places for people to go, not spaces to park.

The hang-up on parking is an indicator that a community has no broader vision for itself.

This state of affairs arises when businesses compete with each other to maximize their own parking spaces—to the detriment of the surrounding community and, inevitably, themselves. The hang-up on parking is an indicator that a community has no broader vision for itself. Get businesses and other parties to cooperate creatively with each other, and you can create the kind of parking infrastructure that supports public spaces. Here are some questions to get businesses and public officials talking about creative new ways to accommodate parking needs with the public's desire for lively public places:

10 Questions to Help Us Get the Most Out of Parking

1. Is it a destination worth creating parking spaces for?

Public dollars are often spent on large parking areas that provide no tax revenue and serve businesses that either compete with existing downtown businesses or would better serve the community if located downtown. But why should municipalities use public funds to subsidize parking spaces for destinations that don't enhance the community as a whole? Spending the same money to instead make development more attractive and connected to downtown means taxes better spent, space better used, and communities better served.

2. Do the parking spaces really make more people want to go there?

Think of the most popular district in your region – places like downtown Cambridge, MA, or the French Quarter of New Orleans. Is it easy to park there? No way! But do people go? You bet! They'll walk six blocks from their car to a store, and LIKE it! Which is to say that people don't come to an area for the parking, they come for what's distinct and special about that place. Why should towns create excess parking spaces if all that asphalt detracts from the qualities that attracted people in the first place? Many communities that have parking shortages are actually thriving.

3. Are parking regulations being obeyed?

When there appears to be a parking shortage, the most likely explanation is that people are simply not obeying parking laws. In the business district of Poughkeepsie, NY, PPS found that more than half the on-street parking was illegal. Parking turnover studies are an easy, inexpensive way to show where violations are happening and suggest how to enforce existing regulations more effectively.

4. Are there opportunities to share business parking lots that have demands at different times of day or week?

Parking areas for churches, theaters, restaurants and bars often sit vacant during peak hours, when demand is highest. Can these businesses and institutions be encouraged to let go of their dedicated parking areas and take advantage of existing nearby parking which is available on evenings and weekends? Put another way: Would people be more likely to go to church or the theater or a restaurant if they saw their destination as simply "downtown" and could easily visit more than one place per trip?

5. Where do employees park? If they have the same shifts, can they carpool?

Merchants and their employees consistently take on-street spots early in the morning and feed the meters all day. They should be encouraged to instead park in municipal parking lots, carpool, or take transit. These alternatives can be made more attractive by designating off-street spots, creating employee incentive programs, or implementing shorter meter times.

6. Is the timing and pricing of meters optimized for each location?

Different sections of the same street may have varying parking needs. The meters in front of a post office, for instance, may provide two whole hours of parking time, but only require ten minutes. Some parking spaces should be more expensive to encourage high turnover. Again, parking turnover studies can inform more appropriate regulations that fit the context of the street.

7. Are there adequate sidewalks and pedestrian amenities connecting off-street parking areas to downtown streets?

The walk to downtown shopping areas from many municipal parking lots and garages is so abysmal that many people won't park there. Though such lots may provide significant quantities of parking, they will be underutilized if the walk from the car is poorly lit, dull, uncomfortable, or outright hazardous.

8. Are there opportunities for angled parking?

Lane widths in downtowns and on commercial streets need only be 8-10 feet, rather than the standard 12-plus feet. This means that many commercial streets are wide enough to accommodate angled parking in some sections. Angled parking can fit almost 50 percent more cars than parallel parking, and it calms traffic, creating a safer environment that's more conducive to pedestrian use.

9. Can curb cuts be consolidated and narrowed?

Frequently, parking lot entrances and exits can be combined, narrowed or made one-way to make room for more on-street parking and a safer, more pleasant pedestrian environment.

10. Are there opportunities to share business drop-offs that have demands at different times of day?

Some truck or passenger drop-off areas are only used for predictable early morning or weekday periods and can be used for parking the rest of the time.

Once you start asking the right questions, ingenuity and cooperation will follow. In Littleton, New Hampshire, for example, PPS worked with the town to address its nagging parking problem by making downtown streets more walkable. Following a series of small, inexpensive traffic-calming experiments, the town is now partnering with several business owners to improve the pedestrian environment, reduce lane widths (and therefore automobile speeds), and expand the pedestrian-friendly downtown area. The improvements will increase the availability of parking spots from which people will feel comfortable walking to downtown by at least threefold. How? By enabling people to consolidate their car trips and visit more places from the same parking spot.

Of course, the biggest benefit of this plan is that more people go out on the sidewalk, which creates the very streetlife that makes other people—and businesses—want to come downtown. But that doesn't happen automatically. In order to create a more desirable street environment for pedestrians, businesses, and drivers, you need to take full advantage of the opportunities presented by rethinking parking. These opportunities include:

- Pedestrian amenities: Street corners with more sidewalk space, seating, and plantings can become the focal points necessary to bring back pedestrians and streetlife.
- Improved safety: Curb extensions make sidewalks and pedestrians more visible to drivers. Narrower lanes slow vehicles and reduce risk to pedestrians and bicyclists. Replacing parking lots with in-fill development eliminates space that is perceived as unsafe and makes possible anonymous criminal behavior.
- Shorter crossing distances: Curb extensions at intersections create shorter crossing distances for pedestrians, and therefore shorter wait times for automobiles.
- Retail kiosks and cafés: Temporary or permanent retail stalls can be placed at the street edge of parking lots or in reclaimed parking spaces.
- Programming and multiple-use spaces: Existing parking lots can be converted—whole or in part—into public squares with markets, performance spaces and seating areas.
- Transit compatibility: By reducing the supply of parking, demand for transit goes up and new destinations form around transit stops.

Spending money on such public amenities instead of parking may seem radical, but in fact it is a wise investment. Pedestrians feel more comfortable walking because of the slower vehicle speeds and reduced number of curb cuts. Businesses get more passersby and first-time walk-ins. Drivers make fewer trips, waste less time in the car, get more exercise walking, and even enjoy the experience of driving downtown more — because it is a pleasant place to be, not a parking lot.

Consider the city of Copenhagen, which has instituted a policy to reduce parking by two percent each year. The risk has paid off many times over by the number of people who now walk and bike to the city center—all of whom, you can be sure, feel at least 50 percent more devotion for their home city.

Rightsizing Best Practices: Street Selection and Before & After Measurements

CARSON CITY

Street rightsizing candidates should be evaluated to determine what kinds of changes would be most effective. Our Street Selection guide immediately follows. Once selected to be rightsized, beginning the process of measuring the effort's outcomes can help support that project, and other rightsizing efforts in the project's area and beyond. Our guide to Before [..]

Before & After Measurements

Obtaining measurements of street conditions before and after the implementation of a rightsizing project is crucial to evaluate and communicate the project's impacts. Before measurements can help define the problem to be solved and the suitability of the proposed solution. After measurements can help ensure that the project has achieved the desired results, and they can also inform adjustments to the project in the future. Publicizing this data can help stakeholders contextualize the impetus and results of the project, and gain public partners and support.

Most statistics are ideally measured over a multi-year period. Periods of three years before and after rightsizing a street are standard, though circumstances could dictate longer periods if a larger sample is desired or shorter periods if preliminary results are required. However, some statistics, such as safety and traffic volumes, may be aberrational immediately after rightsizing implementation as users adjust to the changes. It is also important to consider how other factors impact measurements. The expansion of a nearby parallel route, or other changes to the street network, land use, or population could have as much or more impact than the rightsizing project.

Before and after data is often more necessary for projects in areas where rightsizing has not been previously tried, or when there is considerable debate about whether the approach is appropriate for a particular street or community. The measurements should be selected based on the precipitating factors and goals of the project, and certain targets may be promised to the community as conditions for permanent implementation. Many street or area measurements will be more meaningful when referenced against rates of change in the surrounding area. Below are some best practices for gathering before and after measurements on rightsizing projects.

Traffic Volumes

- Measure each mode separately.
- Aggregate mode volumes to obtain the total volume of daily and peak users on a given stretch of the street. Many more projects measure vehicle traffic volumes than pedestrian activity, perhaps because traffic is easier to measure, even though facilitating safe and enjoyable walking is often a goal. It may also be relevant to explore measuring volumes of specific kinds of vehicles, like trucks.
- Measure volumes of negative or dangerous behavior where relevant. For instance, NYC DOT has measured the numbers of bicyclists riding on the sidewalk (Prospect Park West), as well as pedestrians walking in the street (Broadway) to help evaluate whether its street redesigns are making bicyclists and pedestrians feel more comfortable using the infrastructure designed for them. Vehicular measurements, like midblock U-turns or failure to yield, may also be relevant.

Example Measurements [Daily]	Before	After
Motor Vehicles	14,000	13,800
Bikes	390	510
Pedestrians	620	750
Aggregate Across Modes	15,010	15,060
Pedestrians Crossing Outside of Crosswalk (midblock crossing added)	105	23

Collision Rates

- Measure by mode and aggregate across all modes.
- Distinguish total injuries from serious injuries and deaths.
- Consider breaking down the accidents into types, such as sideswipes or read-ends, to better predict what sorts of accidents will be reduced, as attempted in the analysis of Nebraska Avenue.
- Calculate collision rates based on total "road miles" or the number of miles traveled in order to compare rates as well as the raw numbers of accidents.

Example Measurements [Annually, or Over Three Year Sets Ideally]	Before	After
Motor Vehicle Crashes with Injuries	1,200	680 (-43%)
Crash Injuries (All Modes)	400	120 (-70%)
Serious Injuries Involving Bicyclists	9	2 (-78%)
Serious Injuries Involving Bicyclists per 1000 bicycle miles travelled	0.2	0.01 (-95%)
Pedestrian Injuries from Vehicular Collisions	139	72 (-48%)

Vehicle Speeds

- Calculate the average and 85th percentile speed. Also consider calculating the percentage of cars going over the speed limit or a certain speed over the speed limit that indicates particularly dangerous driving patterns, such as drivers going 45 MPH on a 25 MPH hour.

Example Measurements [Daily or During Peak Periods, Relate to Speed Limit]	Before	After
Average Speed (30 MPH speed limit)	33	31
85 th percentile of driving speeds (30 MPH speed limit)	39	34

Travel Times and Flow

- Measure the point to point vehicle times to show the impact, if any, on the amount of time it takes drivers to travel between destinations.
- Measure left and right hand turn times and the number of vehicles queuing.
- Use “gap analysis” to record and analyze the amount of space and time between vehicles to estimate the impact of a lane reduction on issues like left hand turns and the ability of pedestrians to cross the street.
- Pay special attention to public transportation operations, so that these projects do not negatively affect bus headways. Bus service data should be tracked and impacts should be mitigated if they occur.
- Measure the street crossing times for pedestrians to communicate the impact of reduced distances. Evaluate with the length of crossing periods permitted by traffic signals or the ease of crossing at stop or yield signs.

Example Measurements	Before	After
Vehicular Travel Time Between X Avenue and Y Street	8:04	8:16

Area Wide Measurements

- Measure traffic counts and speeds on nearby streets that may be used as alternate routes. Often, residents are concerned about additional traffic or speeders on their blocks. In some cases, like Raymond Avenue, additional traffic calming or diversion measures may be used to ensure that there are not adverse impacts on nearby streets. In other cases, diverting some traffic to nearby parallel streets is a purposeful outcome of the project. In these cases, the volume or point-to-point measurements are most relevant for multiple streets combined. For instance, on Broadway in New York City, north of Union Square, some traffic was diverted one avenue away to Park Avenue, where there was excess capacity, which resulted in total traffic volume being maintained.

Example Measurements (If 5 th Avenue is rightsized)	Before	After
Traffic Count/85 th Percentile Speed on 6 th Avenue	1000/38mph	1100/38mph
Cumulative Traffic Count and Travel Time from 40 th to 50 th Streets on 5 th and 6 th Avenues Combined	2000/4:05	2000/4:03

Parking

- Compare parking utilization rates, turnover rates, and number of spots to indicate whether there is sufficient parking to meet demand and whether the redesign caused parking demand to increase, and by implication whether there have been desirable or undesirable parking impacts for the area's businesses and residents.

Economic Data

- Surveys are one way to evaluate the economic effects of a rightsizing project. Survey targets may include both local businesses and customers to gauge impacts on shopping, eating out, perceived impacts on transportation, or aesthetics etc. Edgewater Drive used an extensive survey, with positive results.
- Comparing the rightsizing corridor to a reference area's changes in vacancy rates, average rents, or sales values is another approach. This data is often particularly important because of resident and business owner concerns about property values, parking spaces, and both pedestrian and vehicular traffic.
- A different approach is to look at the costs of motor vehicle crashes. This report by AAA/Cambridge Systematics asserts that traffic crashes are far more costly to local economies than congestion. It uses FHWA figures to estimate the cost of an average crash injury at $126,000 and of a death caused by motor vehicle at $6,000,000. They show the average cost of injuries and deaths per person nationally in urbanized areas as more than two and a half times as high as the average per person cost of congestion.
- One example of an effort to evaluate the economic outcomes of a rightsizing project is this report on York Boulevard in Los Angeles, which is not a PPS case study.

Surveys and Public Comments

- Surveys can reveal general feelings about the street, including whether the public supports specific or overall changes, suggestions for improvements, level of comfort driving, parking, walking, and biking, perceived effects on businesses, and more. An example is this survey completed by the Union Square Partnership to evaluate changes that were part of the Broadway case study.

Personal Stories

- Collect personal stories about how the previous street design impeded someone's use of the street – for instance a crossing that a slow walker couldn't safely traverse and how the redesign has made that crossing possible – are important to putting a 'face' on rightsizing projects. For quality of life, community spirit, livability, or sense of safety, a person's own story and voice may be more relevant than any numerical measure.
- Finding and documenting personal stories can be as easy as interviewing a few local residents, businesses, and others in the community, working with a community organization to capture stories, or conducting a survey that asks for qualitative feedback.
- Personal stories can be shared through video, photos, the media, and public engagement meetings.

Photographs & Video

- A photograph can convey information with precision and profundity. Photos are cheap, quick, and effective. Photos from tall buildings or traffic lights often offer the best views, as the three-quarters perspective gives a sense of the cumulative changes and scale. Before and after photos quickly summarize the project.
- Record videos to ensure that the prior conditions are accurately recalled and compared after the project is implemented. Footage of peak and lunchtime traffic, as well as left-hand turning queues, may be particularly important. Video footage is often convincing evidence for people who are skeptical of numerical measurements, or who inaccurately remember traffic conditions before implementation.

Other Potential Measurements

- Pedestrian Environment: Quantify the amount of new pedestrian space available through sidewalks or plazas created, or, further, the number of other new pedestrian amenities, such as the number of seats, or quality of new street lights, etc.
- Placemaking: Beyond personal stories and anecdotes, consider ways to convey that the quality of the street as a place has improved. Pedestrian measurements, particularly indications of new walking trips being generated, documentation of people lingering, and activities like phone conversations and eating outside can all help measure and convey the quality of the place.
- Emissions: Evaluate the amount of greenhouse gases and pollution from vehicles that is reduced. Rightsizing projects can be undertaken as part of congestion or pollution mitigation measures by tracking the resulting mode shift, as well as the reduction in vehicular idling.
- Stormwater: Measure the impact of a street redesign by quantifying the runoff diverted and/or absorbed into new landscaping or surface treatments.
- Aesthetics: Communicate the changes in greenery, such as the number of new trees or pedestrian lights, and other measures that speak to the street's aesthetic appeal.

- Other Costs: Measure the cost of maintaining the street over time, since that may change.

What Makes a Great Public Destination? Is it Possible to Build One Where You Live?

How do you create a magnetic public destination like Luxembourg Gardens? Read on! / Photo: PPS

In a recent blog post, entrepreneur-turned-VC Mark Suster wrote about the necessary ingredients for a city trying to develop a successful start-up community. His advice seemed applicable to any community that's trying to create a strong local sense of place, so we've retrofitted his recommendations to speak broadly to people who are working to transform their public spaces into magnetic destinations that are reflective of the diverse communities that surround them.

[✓] A Strong Pool of Zealous Nuts – If you're reading this, chances are you're either a zealous nut, or you have the potential to be one. You're passionate about place, about your neighborhood, your streets, your favorite park. Zealous nuts are the local leaders who have a vision of how great their community can be, and who want to get all of their neighbors involved in making it happen. They also have the tenacity and patience to stick with that vision, even when fighting an uphill battle. They understand that half of the fun of Placemaking is getting to know their neighbors through discussion, debate, and collaboration. As we've seen time and again, great Placemaking projects can almost always be traced back to one or two driven, dedicated people who are "nuts" about their community.

[✓] Place Capital – Great places generate more value for the communities in which they are located than they actually cost to create. These places draw people into the daily life of their communities, encouraging local investment—both financial (through shopping at local stores and markets) and social. Individual actions toward the improvement of and participation in public spaces are like little investments in Place Capital. If people have opportunities to take part in shaping their public spaces, they will feel more connected to their community, and will be more likely to go the extra mile to keep those spaces attractive and welcoming. This has a magnetic effect, creating a distinctive local character and turning a location into a destination.

[✓] Killer Events – Suster's explanation of the importance of events is spot-on for much more than just the tech community: events bring people together, and get them talking. This builds social capital, and does so in a way that is specifically connected to place. Great events often celebrate unique aspects of a local community, and throw them into high relief—the example of SXSW in Austin is perfect, as it highlights the creative and tech-focused community of people that already exists in Austin, and does so out in the streets. The informal and entertaining vibe puts people at ease, and strengthens the local sense of identity as people mix and mingle.

[✓] Access to Great Advocates – Chatter about Placemaking is on the rise, but not everyone who uses the term is talking about really engaging local communities to facilitate the creation of places that truly reflect the people that they serve. To create a great public destination, it's helpful for a community to have access to advocacy organizations that really "get it," and are proactive in working with locals to help them articulate their needs and claim their place. Look at the Metropolitan Planning Council in Chicago, or (thinking regionally) the Michigan Municipal League. These groups are on a mission to make sure that Placemaking stays an inclusive process, rather than becoming an empty buzzword that is attached to projects that reflect top-down planning and design visions rather than local culture.

[✓] Motivated Champions – 90% of the success of a public space is in its management. For public spaces and districts with access to a large pool of resources, the involvement of a dedicated community development org or business improvement district can be extremely helpful in making sure that the buzz around a space stays strong. New York has dozens of BIDs that manage major squares and shopping districts. As downtowns around the country have surged in recent decades, groups like the Pittsburgh Downtown Partnership and Downtown Houston have helped to guide growth, manage important hubs of public life, and spread the word about what's going on in the heart of town.

Neighbors work together to brighten their Portland neighborhood through City Repair's Intersection Repair project / Photo: City Repair via Flickr

But your champions don't necessarily need a lot of money if they've got a lot of heart. Many spaces are managed by volunteer organizations made up of community members who help to keep a space clean, and "program" it with a steady mix of informal activity. Often times, smaller groups can build capacity over time and scale up; Portland's well-regarded City Repair started out as a group of concerned neighbors who just wanted a safer street corner, and today they've revolutionized community planning across their city!

[✓] Local Press / Websites / Organizational Tools – Great public spaces are stages for public life. In addition to major events like parades, festivals, and other public gatherings, they're perfect places for local media organizations to tap into public opinion on the key issues of the day. Public space managers, whether professional or volunteer, should work hard to build a strong relationship with local media outlets that cover what's going on in the city or region. People attract people, so the more often folks see and hear reminders of how vibrant and exciting a given place is, the more likely they are to travel out of their way to check out the action. In the long term, building strong media partnerships also creates an active local culture that gets more people off the couch.

[✓] Alumni Outreach – Here's an intriguing item on Suster's list that isn't necessarily obvious when you think generally about creating public destinations. If you live in a neighborhood with some history and are trying to turn a place around, it might be helpful to do a bit of research to learn whether there are some famous past residents who might have fond memories of that space when they were growing up in the neighborhood. Great places inspire the kind of visceral memories that spur people to action. Find out who your neighborhood's "alumni" are, and you might find some powerful allies in your effort to restore a down-at-heel site to its former glory.

[✓] Wins – "At the end of the day," writes Suster, "no amount of 'planning' can build a community that is seen as a success – it can just be a contributor." This is the idea at the heart of the Lighter, Quicker, Cheaper approach to public space management. You can plan and plan, but doing is absolutely essential. If you don't have the funds for a new playground, get local organizations to donate odds and ends and have kids from the neighborhood build their own temporary adventure playground. If there's a blank wall that you're not quite ready to cover with a permanent mural, host a chalk party to get up some temporary, community-sourced public art. Small wins today build momentum that can be critical to achieving bigger wins tomorrow.

[✓] Recycled Place Capital / Repeat Placemakers – When people participate in a Placemaking process and see firsthand how powerful an effect it has, both on their public spaces and on their own lives, they often get hooked! This has a spillover effect, meaning that one great public destination can wind up influencing an entire city, or even a whole region. The Power of Ten concept posits that you need at least ten things to do in a public space for it to be a lively, multi-use destination. To have a great neighborhood you, need at least ten of these public destinations. For a great city, you need at least ten great neighborhoods.

Making a great place requires lots of participation from lots of people. That creates lots of new Placemakers, and inspires a whole new group of zealous nuts. Placemaking can change the way that people think about their role within their community, and inspire them to be more intentional about investing in Place Capital not just in their own back yard, but all over town.

[✓] Flagship Public Spaces – Barcelona has Parc Guell, Vancouver has Granville Island, and New Orleans has Jackson Square. These iconic spaces set the bar high, and give neighborhoods in their respective cities something to shoot for. If your city has a flagship space (or, if you're very lucky, a few of them), tap into the public enthusiasm for the sense of place that exists around that location, and remind people that any site can become a beloved destination if it is responsive to the community in which it is located

Re: Carson City Downtown Redesign

Date: January 29, 2013

Dear: Doreen,

The Board of Directors for Muscle Powered have reviewed your proposal to restripe Carson Street in order to reduce it from four (4) to two (2) lanes of traffic from Washington to 5th Streets. This would include adding parallel parking and removing the iron fencing from the west side of Carson Streets. It is also our understanding that none of the current landscaping would be disturbed.

After reviewing the plan, the Board of Directors has voted to endorse your plan. We wish you the best of luck. Please let us know of anything else that we can do in support of this worthy cause.

Sincerely,

Donna N. Inversin

Our main concern is the increased traffic and SPEEDING which comes with it. This is not a town with 5000 population anymore, we are pushing 58,000. People keep referencing small towns and how well it works. We are not a small town anymore. Our thoughts are that most of the parking will be used by local employees and will tie up parking all day. Unless there will be 2 hour parking which we hear businesses do not want?? Obviously the businesses are getting what they want, will there be some sign age directing traffic to use alternate routes? (Roop/Stewart Sts.) If we could get some Sheriff's traffic enforcement over here the city could generate substantial income like up on Edmonds Dr. (Nv. Appeal front page article) Has anyone bothered to drive down Carson St. at 5:00pm any day? Quite congested.

I like using main st. now as a local, and I think many other locals do to. You can get across the 4 lanes if needed, turn left, and even cross it walking. I think the eliminating of a traffic lane would congest the downtown to a point that the locals would not use. Main St and even Tourists, may divert if they see congestion. I don't think we have enough "Retail," fun stores, to pull the Tourists over to stop. If they want to stop, there is plenty of parking as it is now. I also think the spaces will just be used by employees or casinos. I do like the fact that the project is reversible either way.

This project should be delayed and re-evaluated until after the I-580 Bypass is completed. Carson Street is currently the only complete, straight north-south route through the city. The current traffic levels are too high to restrict. I personally try to avoid Carson Street due to the traffic, and only go to businesses that can be accessed from a side street.

*Presented this at a meeting on 11/14/12 with [unclear] and [unclear] to discuss the issue of adding parking on Carson Street and the impact on the downtown area.
 I do not support the plan because it would eliminate a travel lane and create a safety hazard for pedestrians and vehicles. The plan also would create a barrier between the downtown area and the rest of the city. I would like to see a plan that would add parking without eliminating a travel lane.
 Thank you for your time and effort in presenting this plan.

Traffic will have to be stopped
while drivers attempt to parallel park.
That would be annoying.
Let's see how things are after the freeway is finished.
Don't think this would help

AT THIS TIME I CAN NOT SUPPORT THE PROPOSED PARKING PLAN BECAUSE THE OTHER NECESSARY ATTRACTIONS TO MAKE THE DOWNTOWN A VIABLE DESTINATION ARE NOT IN PLACE! THERE NEEDS TO BE MORE MONEY INVESTED IN CREATING AN ATTRACTIVE DOWNTOWN DESTINATION BEFORE THERE WILL BE A NEED TO REDUCE AND REGULATE TRAFFIC
IN THE DOWNTOWN AREA. THERE NEEDS TO BE CITIZEN ATTRACTIONS (RETAIL SHOPS, MOVIE THEATRE, CONCERT VENUE, MULTIPLE ANNUAL OUTSIDE EVENTS) THAT DRAW NOT ONLY PEOPLE FROM CARSON BUT ALSO PEOPLE FROM SURROUNDING AREAS (RENO, SPARKS, LAKE TAHOE) BEFORE WE GO DEDICATE THE TRAVEL LANES.
DOWNTOWN NEEDS TO BUILD A REPUTATION AS A DESTINATION

With the narrowing of downtown traffic this will increase the traffic going down Roop St.. I understand widening of Roop Street is a done deal. However, Roop Street is mainly residential/office. There is a lot of pedestrian traffic, walking to the library, the community center and to schools. I worry my grandchildren will be at an increased danger when walking on Roop Street due to increased traffic that will result of the narrowing of downtown Carson.

I do not think that this is the time to restrict the street. The iron barriers are an enhancement by visually tying the blocks together and restricting jay walking. The only occasions that they seem constrictive are Nevada Day and Taste of Downtown, however the restriction of jay walking during the Taste of Downtown may be more of a blessing due to safety concerns. Until you get a buy off from the State buildings including the Capitol, Legislature, Attorney General Complex, Museum and the Laxalt building to reduce the lanes in front of those location you may just be creating a slalom course. The diminished traffic counts from the freeway opening are already evident and should not be ignored.

Any unnecessary costs to remove fencing, re-stripe, create required ADA access, and impede those using the corridor for an undetermined benefit for a few during this tight economic times should be checked. Most Carson residents are on fixed incomes, have faced belt tightening due to furloughs, reduced hours and increasing costs of food, gas and utilities. The current attitude of increasing taxes and fees must stop! Hiring deputy city managers, buying private buildings and taking them off of the tax rolls and attempting to finance future development on the backs of your residents is wrong.

There is plenty of parking downtown, there just isn't as much disposable discretionary income in Carson City households as there use to be. Carson residents are shopping at the strip malls and limiting their purchases there too! The downtown vacancy rate is nearly zero, many buildings that are not occupied are not ADA compliant.

April 8, 2013

From: Bob Lamkin/Bobs Shell Service

705 N. Carson

Carson City NV 89701

To: Mayor: Robert Crowell

Supervisors: Karen Abowd, Brad Bondowski, John McKenna, & Jim Shirk,

For your consideration:

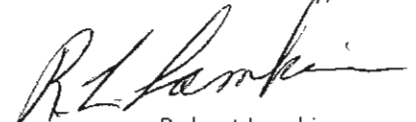

Enclosed is an informal petition that over 17 businesses had posted at their various locations here in the downtown Carson City area. There are 2948 signatures of which 1932 are Carson City VOTERS. Please note that the 2928 people were not just passing thru Carson but shop here regularly and spend money. These people, for various reasons, want Carson Street left the way it is currently. Included is an additional informal petition representing 89 businesses from Carson Street and Stewart Street and range from Carson Street to Winnie Lane. All of these businesses know that reduced traffic down town will hurt or even close their businesses.

There are nine gasoline stations between Stewart Street and Hot Springs Road. All together we collect approximately $500,000.00 in Carson City gas tax. According to Scott McGruder, with NDOT changing Carson St. to one lane will reduce the traffic count anywhere from 30% to 50%. That's a net LOSS to CARSON CITY between $150,000.00 and $250,000.00 per year, every year!

According to the Carson Area Metropolitan Planning Organization "CAMPO" By DKS associates dated June 13, 2007 "Once the freeway is completed this might work." It also states that, "Carson Street is a commercial corridor and that at peak AM & PM rush hours traffic could back up as much as four blocks."

I have been the property owner and operator in Carson City since 1979 at the same location, downtown Carson City.

Sincerely,

Robert Lamkin
